

COLONIAL PRESS CONFERENCE.

But the King of Hearts (loud cheer). Welcome home to this and to anything besides that we in all brotherhood and affection can offer. (Cheers.) We have come here to have to propose the health of our guests, coupled with the name of the toast was pledged with enthusiasm.

Hugh Graham in reply said: My Lords and Gentlemen—Whence are to blame for the selection of a speaker to reply to the toast? (Laughter.) I am afraid it is the newspapermen who are responsible for the value of contrasts in creating an interest. It can hardly be imagined that any man in the world could ever over the seas this warm welcome appreciate how we feel about it. (Cheers.) But never are we, any of us, so deeply touched by the welcome home as the Canadian people themselves, which the kindest courtesy of the stranger can never approach. And this is the reason why there is a very special sense to all of us. It is the home of our free institutions, of our political ideas, the company of our conceptions of all that should constitute a free, courageous and enlightened people. When we received the invitation to pay a visit, to see what Britain at play, no one could have foreseen that the modest little invitation of the King of the United Kingdom, and by leading men in English public life, would develop into such an association. If the invitation had been restricted to this magnificent banquet, if it had not developed into a social meeting only in kind, hosts of tonight, and our brothers from every direction over the world, journalists and statesmen to day, and the young men here, many of whom are the leaders of the statesmen of the future; if it had been intended that we should have been invited to a dinner in the same offered tonight by one of England's greatest statesmen, we should have been more than willing to accept and never-to-be-for-gotten privilege, but when we think of the personal, the individual, the kindly prepared and the kindly arrangements for our amusement and in every way, we are struck with a sense of generosity and struck with a sense of our own unworthiness. There are at least two thousand gentlemen of the world, the respect of the whole world—the British Bench, and, with some unimportant exceptions, the British press. (Cheers.) The journalists of some other countries are in their quarter, perhaps, in private, a few steps away, but I am afraid it will bite like bad advantage, if it be an accident. For the verifying principles that give life and health to our journal must still look to Great Britain. (Cheers.) What—right over the main door, a place where the heat and the householder can reach it. So Sunshine Furnaces fit into the householder's convenience.

I want to say this, that people are more apt to believe what they see in a great British paper than any other. They have more faith in the truth of what they read in the columns of a newspaper, than in the paid metaphores of financial barometers. (Hear, hear.) You know, I am sure, that the earliest hope of the colonists was that you will guard it. (Cheers.) We have come to the conference with open minds on every question to be discussed, and they will doubtless feel that, it will give greater weight to their cause. We have come to raise the press in public esteem by raising its influence for the good of the Empire. (Hear, hear.) The Feed Door of a No. 200 Sunshine Furnace is 12 x 13 inches. This means that the largest shovelful of coal will be the same size, and that good-sized chunks of wood require no chopping in order to fit.

This saves fuel and plants rooms above.

To make "Sunshine" the easiest-to-be-cleaned furnace, we construct two doors, one at an equal distance from each other, but at an equal distance from the large feed door. So the operator with an ordinary oxcleaning brush can go around the furnace without getting near the fire or lake down the smoke-pipe.

This saves fuel and plants rooms above.
